In this paper, a novel electrochemical method for the detection of trace chloramphenicol (CAP) was developed. It was used sulfonated graphene (SG) modified polyacrylamide gel (PAM) electrode (SG/PAM) as the sensing electrode. Here, CAP was adsorbed on to the SG/PAM electrode via ion-exchange process. Under the optimal conditions, the current responses of the SG/PAM were found to be linear in the range of $1.0 \times 10(-8)$ - $1.0 \times 10(-5)$ mol L(-1) for CAP with a detection limit of $1.0 \times 10(-8)$ mol L(-1) (S/N=3). In addition, SG/PAM electrode shows good selectivity toward CAP over a variety of small organic compounds. In the same buffer solution, this approach exhibits a lower detection limit as compared to the conventional methods used for CAP determination. Moreover, the response of SG/PAM electrode is very fast, easy to carry out, and has high reproducibility. Finally, the proposed method is applied to the determination of CAP in a pharmaceutical preparation.Q: Why use "might", but not "could"? When someone is "restraining himself/herself", I feel that one way to say it is "Could": "That could cause

Is this a good way to do it? double d = 12345.67; String s = Double.toString(d); double d2 = (double)Integer.parseInt(s); Is there a more "proper" way? A: You can just do the string->double/double->string yourself and use double.valueOf(String) for the conversion. Your way of doing it is fine though. The Republican response to the scandal of the month is now the ritual convention of claims of rigged elections, voter fraud, and death threats aimed at Rep. Todd Akin (R-MO). The claim that ground troops were sent to Afghanistan to "gain women's support" is still aimed not just at the false claim that women are held in Afghanistan by U.S. troops (they're not), but also at the broader agenda of the Obama administration to promote abortion. The Times reports on Akin's latest claims: When he took his seat on the House floor 595f342e71
